

control arms

Dear Secretary-General,

Every year an average of two bullets for every person on this planet is produced. With so few global rules governing the arms trade, no one really knows where all those bullets will end up – or whose lives they will tear apart.

Under the current system, there are less global controls on the sales of ammunition and guns than on bananas and bottled water. It's a ridiculous situation.

Next week all this could change. All the world's governments will meet at the United Nations in New York, for a month of negotiations to agree an international Arms Trade Treaty – the first of its kind.

Provided world leaders get it right, this new treaty could help put an end to shady arms deals and prevent arms transfers where they are likely to contribute directly to serious human rights abuses, war crimes or poverty.

As supporters of Amnesty International and Oxfam, we urge governments to step forward and deliver a robust, effective treaty that protects human rights. A treaty that puts a stop to the needless deaths and injuries which occur everyday as a result of armed violence and conflict. The decisions taken around this treaty really are a matter of life and death.
